RegCure Screenshots: Builders see a growing demand for rental property - afdfdsdsd I have been renting out my house for a long time now. Not in the sense of letting my house, but I take in boarders and tenants, and this seems to be an increasing trend as land sales and demand increase. I think the stigma of being a landlord is fading and I haven't met a single one of the tenants I have had, as a landlord I think the renters want to experience the community as well. ====== brc I'm a landlord myself, so it's not criticism here. Renting out is a great way to have a property while also being able to be away from a place. Its the same with moving. If you don't have a place to live, why would you want to live in the same place, regardless of the emotional attachments? This has been a very good thing. You have an opportunity to live a simpler life. A rental gives you the option of being able to have 09e8f5149f

Antibiotic prophylaxis for community-acquired pneumonia may decrease the number of pneumonias due to Streptococcus pneumoniae, but at the cost of increasing numbers due to susceptible gram-negative rods. Moxifloxacin is a new broad-spectrum antibiotic with activity against both gram-positive and gram-negative bacteria. Previous comparative data from clinical trials showed that moxifloxacin was as effective as amoxicillin in curing community-acquired pneumonia. In this study, we compared the clinical efficacy and safety of a moxifloxacin-based regimen (initiated after 72 hours of symptoms) with a 3-day amoxicillin course. In addition, for the first time, we used moxifloxacin prophylaxis to prevent pneumonia by Streptococcus pneumoniae and a susceptible gram-negative rod at a dose of 0.4 g twice daily for 10 days, compared with no antibiotic prophylaxis in a placebo-controlled, double-blind study. Both regimens had a similar cure rate of 82%, and no significant differences in side effects were found. Prophylactic use of moxifloxacin was significantly more effective than no antibiotic for prevention of pneumonias due to Streptococcus pneumoniae (91% vs 69%, P
