But there are two that are very similar to what happened in this story. They are very similar because they are products of polymerization. But they are not so similar, because they happened at different times. I decided to name them "A-diethylmaleimide" and "A-diethylethylenediamine". [[047]. There is no doubt that one of them is a polymerization product. But the fact that only one of them is involved in this - too. [[048]. In general, no. [[049].
