History of AutoCAD AutoCAD was the first and leading software application of the Autodesk family and is the most successful desktop CAD application available. The roots of AutoCAD, or AutoDraw as it was originally named, began in the late 1960s as the centerpiece of a separate company, Focal (later, Focal Systems, Inc.), which was founded by brothers Stephen and Lew Fischman in 1969 to address the need for fast data entry software for people working in fields such as science, medicine, and engineering. The Fischmans licensed the technology to Endress & Hauser, Inc. in 1970. Although Focal continued developing CAD applications for internal use, its main focus was the development of their data entry solution and its successor, Datalogic. (The Fischmans renamed their company Autodesk in 1975.) AutoCAD 1: Release on January 15, 1983, was a first-generation application for the Apple II computer. AutoCAD 2, released in February 1985, was an enhancement over AutoCAD 1, with support for multiple windows and palettes. AutoCAD 2 Plus was released in June 1987, featuring improvements in 2D drawing and for the Apple IIGS. AutoCAD 3 was released in November 1988, offering an improved interface and support for 3D modeling in fixed and motion graphics. The introduction of AutoCAD was closely linked to the market for text processing and related software. This was to be the case for all future AutoCAD applications, with the software released within a few months of This double-blind clinical study was designed to evaluate the effects of four commercially available fluoride-containing dentifrices with different concentrations of fluoride on caries activity, stimulated and stimulated saliva flow rates, and enamel microhardness. Ninety-six 4-year-old schoolchildren participated in the study. The children were randomly assigned to the following groups: (1) placebo toothpaste, (2) placebo toothpaste with base abrasives, (3) 0.3% fluoride dentifrice, (4) 0.7% fluoride dentifrice. The children were instructed to brush their teeth twice daily for one minute with a soft-bristled toothbrush, and were evaluated on the first, third, and seventh days of the study. Caries activity, expressed as the mean change in the DFS surfaces, was lowest for the 0.3% fluoride dentifrice and placebo, followed by the 0.7% fluoride dentifrice, the placebo with base abrasives, and the placebo alone. The 0.3% and 0.7% fluoride dentifrices significantly increased stimulated saliva flow rates, and the 0.3% fluoride dentifrice increased stimulated saliva flow rates by 38% compared with placebo. Mean enamel microhardness values of the 0.3% fluoride dentifrice were significantly higher than the 0.7% dentifrice

First of all, this is NOT a stable release of the app. The actual release date will be in a few days. The version number has not changed since the initial preview build. The "beta" term is merely to indicate that this will likely have more bugs than the preview, but will be in a much better place than the
