Consultative effect of bone marrow transplantation on lethally irradiated mice with long-term persistence of donor-type hemopoietic stem cells. The mouse spleen colony forming cells (CFU-S) were depleted by whole body irradiation with lethal doses (LD100) of gamma-irradiation and transplantation of bone marrow was performed from adult non-irradiated donor mice in order to obtain long-term donor-type hemopoietic stem cells (HSC) in the recipient. The recipient mice were lethally irradiated with a LD100 dose of X-rays 4 weeks after bone marrow transplantation. One group of mice was sacrificed 4 weeks after irradiation. The other group of mice was kept for 6 to 8 months after irradiation without treatment. In recipients, a total of 4.7 times more CFU-S were recovered in the recipients treated with bone marrow transplantation than in those without treatment. The CFU-S were recovered 1cdb36666d

Darkroom: The Core I have several projects I'm working on, including the one I'm currently struggling with. It's not complete. It's not even done, and I know it, because it's shit. It's unfinished and it's obviously going to end up in a giant heap of unfinished shit at the bottom of my artistic career. I have to work my way out of this mess. But there's no time. I'm really struggling, and I'm not interested in engaging in a fight with myself. So, on to my next project. I'm all excited and can't wait to work on this new one. My Top 10 Albums of 2016 Signed copies are available for pre-order (plus other incentives) here. (You'll have to get in line, because they're not shipping until Feb 6th.) 10) Prefab Sprout – The Briefest Brief Prefab Sprout has had a long and varied career, including stints as a folk rock outfit, a prog rock act, and a psychedelic, space-fuzzy surf band. In 2001 they released a million-selling album called This Delicate Thing We've Made, so they're not really “rebooting” anything. But they are, as their third album proves, still true to their roots. Q: How can I prevent file uploading from remote, not local, origin in a Rails app? I have a public directory where I want to store all assets. I created a Rails controller for that public directory as static resource, which is basically a placeholder for all my assets. (When I say "placeholder", I mean that it is a controller, and it should serve to a specific URL.) I have the file upload controller in a Rails Engine. I want to create a controller to upload files in this public directory as per above mentioned public directory. But now I get the problem. I cannot create a controller that serves as my placeholder or as I said, a placeholder for the public/assets directory because I already have a controller for the file upload (engine) and they both have the same method. Basically, how can I create a controller that serves as a static resource to public and I want to prevent any file uploading from inside that same folder? A: I don't understand why you are surprised that your controller is treated as common controller? That's what you're telling Ruby. One simple way is to declare your Engine controller as an Exception controller or whatever name you choose. Then, you'll be able to distinguish the files uploaded using your Engine and the uploads using your public directory. For example, your Engine controller may inherit from ApplicationController and be named MyEngineController. You can also add a before filter to the PublicController to check if the request comes from the Engine. The Blockchain ID Act: Preparing Our Children for a
