To explore the value of the pulsed Doppler flowmetry (PDF) in detecting the hemodynamic changes in vascular microcirculation in pregnancy-induced hypertension (PIH). At 24-28 gestational weeks, 15 patients with PIH and 15 pregnant normotensive women were evaluated. The cerebrovascular reserve was detected using the PDF. Vascular diameter and blood flow velocity were measured in the middle cerebral artery, anterior cerebral artery, anterior communicating artery, posterior communicating artery and basilar artery. Blood flow velocity and pulse wave were recorded in the circle of Willis. The blood flow velocity in the cerebral microvasculature decreased in the PIH patients as compared to the normal pregnant women, while vascular diameter increased in the PIH patients. The vascular response to the post-occlusive reactive hyperaemia was lower in the PIH patients than in the normal pregnant women. The cerebrovascular reserve capacity (CVR) decreased in the PIH patients. The CVR decreased significantly in the PIH patients when compared to the normal pregnant women. The blood flow velocity decreased with an increase in the diameter of the vessel and the vascular resistance was higher in the PIH patients than in the normal pregnant women. The PDF can detect the hemodynamic changes of the vascular microcirculation in the PIH patients..smallcaps} {#sec1-4}

What's new:

"The Giant of Torridge Island" is a short story written by American author Jack London, and published in the July 1893 edition of Collier's Weekly. It was later included in the collections The Scarlet Plague (1895), Land of the Yellow Jay (1896), and The Game of Death and Other Stories (1997). It, and the novella "Mark, Ward of Lodore", were the last Jack London stories to be considered part of his American-quota work. Plot summary In 1880, based on a meeting at Wild Eye Jack's cabin in the Yukon-Alaska region, the crew of a merchant ship, the Hotspur, are introduced to a large mountain gorilla. Jack London describes him as usually solitary, but has been known to assemble other gorillas to watch a returning shipwreck. The sailors wait for the monkey's return with a mixed sense of excitement and fear, knowing his size, strength, and ferocious temper, but they are also aware that he is big enough and strong enough to defeat any of them in hand-to-hand combat. Jack describes him as "shaggy-maned, sinister-eyed, small-mouthed and red of mane, cold of eye and hot of temper". Two weeks later, the Hotspur is on fire and sinking off Cape Evans, Antarctica. The crew also see the animal and stowaway in the water. The captain convinces the others the large animal must belong to a King family, and the crew decides to save him. Primed with dynamite charges the men manage to kill the beast in self-defense, but his last shot in the dark makes a hole in the buttocks of the Captain, as well as killing the cook. Jack describes the dying Captain as "pushing back a wild sea of bearded conscripts in a shaky, tottering, but still defiant boat. The beast was on him in a wild scrimmage. The man sawed, the beast blocked. Then the water roared with a new flame, a red flame. A blinding crash! A mountain reared on end!" Upon being released by the Chief Mate, the monkey waves to the crew, who are in awe of his size. The captain offers the gorilla as a souvenir, but the man declines. The crew are also travelling with a second monkey. They intend to free him in an attempt to persuade him to board the ship and swim to the shore. When they try to untie the chains
