Why does the sky always look blue even on a sunny day? It is a very common observation. A: The sun is reflected off of the bottom half of the atmosphere and passes right through the top half of the atmosphere, creating a refraction phenomenon. It is the same as if you have a piece of glass with two liquid layers: you could see through the top one but not the bottom one. The atmosphere is liquid-like that way. A: When sun rays hit the atmosphere, refraction will change the angle of the light, so it will look different when it is reflected back. Also, the scattered light passes through the atmosphere. These two effects will be present in both the blue sky and the white clouds, but at different angles
