Movie. .Two months ago, we mentioned that the Armed Forces of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (AFDPRK) were developing a new tactical missile (presumably intended for mid-to-long-range) and that a prototype was reportedly expected to be ready by October 2013. On December 30, the Korea Institute for Defense Analyses (KIDA) released a report showing that the AFDPRK was very likely to possess a new solid-fuel ballistic missile with a range of at least 1,200 miles (2,000 kilometers). The news comes from an anonymous source in the Korea Defense and Security Forum (KDSF), who attended a November 2013 KIDA briefing on the progress of the B-type-2 missile project. The anonymous source reportedly asked to remain anonymous due to the sensitive nature of the project. In any case, the source's claim was corroborated by the presence of a team of KIDA analysts who spent the day of the briefing
