If you are interested in a more serious home monitoring software, I recommend to pick the paid version. The free version is a very basic tool. On the upside, you can save your personal settings. On the downside, you have no possibility to change the settings for the different clients. They all inherit the settings from the admin computer. That said, this is an excellent free software if you want to simply learn how to work with a home network. I will use the free version. However, if you are looking for serious home monitoring software, I would recommend to pick the paid version. This is a great free software to learn This is a great free software to learn. You can setup the network and the firewall of your choice, and tweak the settings for the clients. You have no way to backup your settings, and you have to remember your login and password. But it is a very easy tool to use. I'm not happy about some settings. The Network management tool is very easy to use. You can

HandyCafe Firewall [2022-Latest]

Windows application designed for helping you filter and block access to webpages, take proactive measures against malicious attacks, and limit the download and upload speed using custom firewall settings. This tool can be of great help especially for cybercafés or other small-sized business where you need to control and filter Internet content. The installation package comes with a server edition which can be deployed on the administrator's computer, as well as a client one for the PCs that you want to manage. Features: • Network computers, logs and reports • Filters and bandwidth limitations • Banned websites • Custom password • Application options • General configuration settings • Overall efficient firewall app Changelog: • Added support for Windows 7 and Windows 8.1 • Fixed logging speed (May be less than 1 KB/s after log printing) • Fixed 'Group names cannot contain spaces' message • Added option to change TCP port on client edition • Added option to change application password on server edition • Removed log folder settings and old log option. • Added log reporting/log printing option • Fixed logging speed (Can be over 1 MB/s after log printing) Platform: Windows Kemu Kemu is a small, fast and very easy-to-use program for converting audio files from one format to another. You can easily convert music, MP3, WMA, WAV, OGG and many other formats, but its main features are covering audio formats (MP3 and AAC) that are supported by MP3 players and most popular audio devices. The app also comes with a bundled web radio feature allowing you to listen to internet radios in your newly created.mp3 files. You can manage all the settings from the Kemu Preferences window, and select options for audio encoding, audio quality, output audio format and cover the radio stations via the provided search engine. Moreover, you can save cover art for each song, as well as assign one to an audio file. Kemu doesn't support mobile devices, but for desktops and laptops you may always use the download manager to save the converted files. Features: • Batch conversion • Cover art assignment • Radio features • Options for audio quality, encoding, output audio format, and cover art • Built-in search engine • Download manager Platform: Windows Kemu Kemu is a small, fast and very easy-to-use program for converting audio files from one format to another. You can easily convert music, MP3, WMA handyCafe Firewall Firewall is a small Windows application designed specifically for helping you filter and block access to webpages, take proactive measures against malicious attacks, and limit the download and upload speed using custom firewall settings. HandyCafe Firewall is a small Windows application designed specifically for helping you filter and block access to webpages, take proactive measures against malicious attacks, and limit the download and upload speed using custom firewall settings. Firewall feature is easy to use, just select a group of computers and other options, such as local IP address and port number. The tool supports local firewall and proxy server settings, as well as local IPv4 and IPv6 rules and other options. It comes with a server edition which can be deployed on the administrator's computer, as well as a client one for the PCs that you want to manage. User interface The server version of handyCafe Firewall sports a clean and intuitive design that allows you to easily switch between the main features of the utility, namely Network Computers, Log and Reporting/Log. A dedicated panel is reserved for browsing on the official website of the app. Network computers, logs and reports You can view all computer identified in your network, along with information about them, such as date/time, IP and MAC addresses, user, version, status, download and upload speed. The log keeps track of visited websites, banned webpages, as well as links accessed via different search engines. In addition, you are allowed to print or clear the log content, as well as export log data to CSV, XML or plain text file format. Reports can be generated for a given date. You may include banned logs and search engine logs, and print or export the report data to the same formats as those used for saving logs for offline viewing. Filters and bandwidth limitations handyCafe Firewall gives you the freedom to set up filters in order to restrict websites. You may create a list with user-defined webpages to be banned or trusted, as well as ban webpages based on custom keywords and file types. Advanced features enable you to apply the current filter settings to all active computers or the selected ones. The tool comes with several preset filters but you need to download them in order to make use of them. Bandwidth limitation can be applied only for web applications in order to restrict the download and upload speed. Plus, you may alter the bandwidth for all active computers or only the selected ones. General configuration settings handyCafe Firewall allows you to activate security measures in order to make sure other users cannot alter your settings (ask password on restore and options menu), and show banned websites in the log with visited websites. Furthermore, you can set up several client parameters in order to ask for password, enable protection against tunnel websites, and apply the same password for both clients and admin. You may

What's New in the HandyCafe Firewall?
