If you asked me whether to stick with Instagram, Instagram, or to check out Periscope or another social network for sharing your life, I'd take Periscope and do it via Periscope. A Windows desktop client for capturing web-based screen shots and sharing them on Periscope has been available for the last couple of years. Today, we're proud to announce that you can now use the Periscope Capture tool on a smart device.

The Periscope Capture iPhone app is the first option from the native app section of the Periscope site. It's been a while since Twitter acquired Twitter Deck, but that's just a tech detail; the functionality remains the same. If you enjoy the instagram service, you'll feel right at home on Periscope. The app offers you a great, clean interface that you can use to snap web photos and share them on Periscope directly from the app.

Where do I begin, to really praise the update? I'll start with the fact that smart objects are back. I know, you probably didn't miss them that much! But they're back and they do what they do. This is a great tool for helping you to effortlessly lift specific elements from one layer and place them on another, such as creating a banner or logo that can be used on numerous images.

Mobile support has also been added, and it's pretty solid. With the new mobile support, you can upload images to the cloud from any iPad or Android device without downloading any special software. You can also upload multiple images at a time through the notification tray. I do enjoy using mobile editing for 20-second GIFs, for example, but it's cool to be able to do that from everywhere and easily.
